A big success

The Romulus High School "Student of the Month" program completed another successful year when senior Katie Hale won a $500 U.S. Savings Bond in the grand finale drawing. During the year, 295 students were recognized as Students of the Month. This year, $4,200 in funding for the program was collected from businesses and community agencies. Here, Hale (center) collected her bond from program administrator Dan Foley and his assistant, Anna Bossidis. In the history of the program, more than $266,000 has been given to students who earn good grades and show exemplary citizenship.

Pensions, insurance absorb funding hike

School officials are sitting on pins and needles now that the effort to give districts a $175 increase in per-pupil funding has passed the State House, but for Romulus Community Schools, the increases might be gobbled up by health care costs and pension obligations.

Superintendent Joel Carr said the past three years without a raise in per-pupil funding from the state have been difficult for the 4,000-student district. He said school officials are grateful a funding increase is in negotiations, but that it won't solve all of the district financial issues.

"It's like getting a 1 percent raise - it's hard to get excited about," he said. "But if it were a 6-percent raise, you might get excited. It's just not going to change things very much."

Health insurance costs - which continue to rise each year - increased for the district for the 2205-06 school year. Pension contributions for district retirees also increased, Carr said. Last year, the district contributed about 12 percent of payroll costs to the pension fund, but it will go up to about 14 percent for 2005-06.

"That means if you have a $10

Tribes will pursue Romulus casino

Molly Tippen

A consortium of Indian tribes announced Monday that they would follow through with a plan to build a casino on Vining Road, near where a harness racing track will be constructed later this year.

The Grand Traverse Band of Ottawa and Chippewa Indians said four of the seven tribes in the gaming compact approved by then-Gov. John Engler in 1993 will meet with Romulus city officials to devise an agreement regarding what percentage of income the city will receive from the casino, said Mayor Alan Lambert.

"They don't pay property taxes on reservation land," he said. "Property taxes on that piece of land would be about $200,000 a year, but with the way things work with reservations, you negotiate a number. This could mean about $10 million a year going forward, which would be incredible given that we have a $20 million operating budget."

The inter-tribal agreement signed in 1994 by the seven tribes specifies that a board made up of tribal leaders would manage the facility, according to information released by John Petosky, the attorney for the Grand Traverse Band.

Lambert could not say when the first meeting would take place, but did say he would like to see at least a temporary facility open by next year.

"I'd like it open yesterday, but realistically, we're hoping sooner rather than later," he said.

Four tribes agreed to move forward with the plan; the remaining three are likely waiting for approval of legislation that would allow for a second casino to open within the city, Lambert said.

"We have studies that show Romulus could support two casinos. But I would be happy with one," said Lambert.

A casino in Romulus would face stiff competition on several fronts. There are three casinos in Detroit and one in Windsor, Ontario. But having Detroit Metropolitan Airport nearby might drive some traffic into the casinos from travelers staying at hotels in Romulus, or those who might have to wait for flights, officials said.

"I think it's a great idea to have everything together, instead of 30 miles away," Lambert said. "I really don't think we're going to hurt (profits in) Detroit at all."

Once the city and tribes sign an agreement for sharing profits, the process will look similar to the one that played out in Detroit. A temporary facility will

No decision as yet reached about shooting charges

Prosecutors expect to know whether a 38-year-old Romulus man will face criminal charges for fatally shooting an Inkster man earlier this month.

Assistant Wayne County prosecutor Maria Miller said a review panel is currently under way, and that a determination about the case is forthcoming.

"We think we'll have an answer by the end of this week," she said. "We always have several people review the case before we make a decision in cases like this."

Inkster resident Charles Cheeseborough bled to death in the back yard of a Romulus home on June 10. A single gunshot wound severed the main artery in Cheeseborough's leg.

The altercation began after Cheeseborough allegedly broke into the home.

One detail that has emerged since Romulus Police began an investigation is that Cheeseborough may not have acted alone that Friday night.

"We think there might have been another person, but we don't who the person is right now," said Romulus Det. Lt. John Leacher. "I don't really have too much more at this time."

The homeowner was alone in his home at 12:30 a.m. June 10 when Cheeseborough made his way into the home, using a window, according to police reports. The men had the fatal confrontation in the master bedroom of the home on the 15500 block of

Family Fun Night

A good time was had by all at the recent Halecreek Elementary School "Family Fun Night." The event was organized by Halecreek staffers to give students and their family members a chance to spend some quality time together. Here, James Bremton and students Kirsty MacDonald and Amber Brenton joined teacher Julie Hirschert before a bracelet-making tournament. Family Fun Nights take place at each of the four elementary schools in the Romulus Community Schools District.

The annual Music in the Park concert series will be located at Victory Park in Belleville (above). The music event will continue until the end of August featuring area favorites like the Belleville Community Band and new additions such as the S.E. Michigan French Horn Choir.

Music in the air Local concerts continue at Victory Park

Andrea King

Already under way, the Music in the Park concert events will continue to bring music to Belleville all summer long.

The annual concert series began last Sunday afternoon at Victory Park in Belleville, located at the "Five Points" area of the city. Performances start at 3 p.m. every Sunday until August.

This year, the performers will include: the Belleville Community Band, the S.E. Michigan French Horn Choir, the Music Lady, April Gibson and Austin Scott, the Blue Skies Trio and Crosswind: A Christian Praise Troupe.

According to Barbara Fairman, a member of the music committee and the Belleville Area Council for the Arts, the concert series is free entertainment that the whole family can enjoy.

"We try to get a variety of music that will be a hit in a large area," she said. "I think we have a full season of great music. It's the kind of event that has that small town feel so I'm happy to see it still going strong."

The Belleville Community Band started the series last week with their first of four performances. They will continue to play throughout the summer with their last performance on Aug. 21. The band is a large group, made up of people ranging from high school students up to senior citizens. This year the group is bigger than ever, according to Fairman.

The group will then continue their performances with Director Tim Miller on July 17, a centennial celebration tribute for Belleville on Aug. 7 and a finale concert and ice cream social Aug. 21.

The S.E. Michigan French Horn Choir will follow the Belleville Community Band on July 3, which will feature horn players blended in melodious tunes, familiar and patriotic. Some members even belong to the area Belleville Community Band, Fairman said.

"This performance is different because usually you don't hear horns as performers, usually they are heard in the background," she said.

The Music Lady, former Belleville resident Beverly Meyer, will follow on July 10. Meyer will be back for an encore as she provides an interactive performance for both children and adults.

"All the locals love the Music Lady because she's such a wonderful performer," said Fairman. "She certainly draws the biggest crowd."

April Gibson and Austin Scott, a welcome home grown addition, will perform on July 24. The Belleville High School graduate and her partner, Scott, will show their singing and guitar talents.

Blue Skies Trio will follow Gibson and Scott on July 31 playing hits from the 40s, 50s and 60s.

Crosswinds: A Christian Praise Troupe will perform Aug. 14. The group will feature contemporary music using keyboard, guitar drums and vocals.

"It's going to be a good program and if the weather is nice to us, it will be a good year," said Fairman. "We've brought back a lot of groups and took a lot of ideas from residents on what they were interested in hearing so we hope for a big turnout."

And they usually get one, Fairman said, typically more than 100 people per concert.

In case of rain, concerts will be at the First United Methodist Church on Charles Street in Belleville. For more information about the concert series, contact the Belleville Area Council For the Arts at 734-697-8123.

Chamber may host circus

The Belleville Area Chamber of Commerce would like to host the Kelly Miller Brother Circus again this year in Belleville.

If approved by the city council, the circus will take place for two performances at 2 p.m. and at 4:30 p.m. on Aug. 14.

A public hearing will take place at 7:30 p.m. on July 5 during the next regular city council meeting on the issue.

Candidate stresses skills, experience

Molly Tippen
Staff Writer

William Crova said he hopes his years as a local business owner catapult him to a fourth term on the Romulus City Council.

Crova, 58, was the owner of Crova GMC for more than 30 years until he sold the business to GM dealer Joe Rogan in 2001. But Crova said he remembers well how much skill it takes to run a business.

"I see the City of Romulus like a business, and that's how I've approached being a councilman," said Crova. "The day-to-day operations of a municipality are very much the same as a business - that's how I look at the city. Business experience is very, very important."

Crova, a lifelong Romulus resident, was elected to the city council for a two-year term in 1995. Since then, he has been re-elected for two four-year terms. Prior to his election to council, he served for six years as the chairman of the planning commission. He said 16 years of involvement in local politics should help him emerge victorious from a field of 16 candidates in an at-large election.

"I have 10 years as a city councilman, and I have the experience needed to represent the people of the community," he said. "I've lived in Romulus my entire life, and I know what people want and need in this community. I want it to be better for myself, and other residents."

A fourth term for Crova would mean helping to ensure much-desired development on the north side of Romulus occurs in a timely fashion, helping make the planned recreation facility and senior facility a reality and finding ways to fund new projects.

He said the development is the single most important facet in the city's overall plan, especially since the city has paid for roadwork to accommodate increased traffic. "I'm concerned about the Metro World development," Crova said. "I think we're finally close to something happening there, and we've put some money into things happening there. I'm not interested in paying another cent until someone puts a shovel into the ground. That's where some of our revenue will come from."

Recreation and senior activities are also important to Crova. "I really worked hard to help the new recreation facility," he said. "I thought it was important for residents, as is the new senior center. We had an opportunity to renovate the old facility, or we could build a new one. I thought it was important to take the opportunity to build a new facility."

Crova said he's confident his record as a councilman will help him in his bid for re-election, but said he's glad to see that many people are interested in running for office.

"To see that many people running for a city council seat is great because it means people know what's going on in the community," he said.

The primary election will narrow the field of candidates to 14. It will take place on Sept. 13.

Improved library is among candidate's goals

Molly Tippen
Staff Writer

After having spent nearly his entire adult life in local government, Councilman Mike Prybyla said he's looking forward to a potential fourth term as a Romulus City Councilman.

"Being in county government gave me a very real idea about what municipalities face," he said. "I was just always aware of what was happening, and there were many difficulties."

Prybyla, 56, was first elected to the city council in 1993 - while he was in the midst of a career in management at the Wayne County Department of Health. He sought a council seat because he said he wanted to give back to the city - a concept he said brings him back every four years.

"I owe the city a lot, and I want to keep repaying it," he said.

Prybyla's career in the public sector began after he earned both an associates and bachelor's degree in public health at Ferris State University in the 1960s. While working for the county, Prybyla earned a master's degree in health administration at the University of Michigan. He spent 24 years working for the county, and is now retired.

If he is re-elected, Prybyla said he would like to see improvements to the Romulus Public Library, because he feels the facility and the services are not on par with libraries in other communities.

"I feel it's a little bit behind what others have, and it would do our community well to take a look at that," he said. "I'm already doing that privately. We need more floor space - which would make room for more books - and we definitely need a new children's area. The computer services are OK, but they need to be improved, as well."

That could mean the current facility could be renovated, or that a new facility should be constructed on another site.

"We need to look at our options to see what works best," he said.

Prybyla's other priorities include finding ways to improve law enforcement and seeing the proposed racetrack through to fruition.

"The crime is not a huge problem, but we are having some crime in the city that needs to be dealt with," he said.

Mike Prybyla

"There are a number of breaking and enterings; stuff like that. We should be more proactive in creating neighborhood watch programs so people are aware of what's happening."

He also said the city needs to not rest on its laurels now that the Michigan Gaming Control Board has granted a gaming license to Magna Entertainment for a planned harness racing track on Vining Road.

Prybyla said he is confident he will win another term because he has always voted his conscience on the issues that come before him as a councilman.

"I love the City of Romulus, and I will do whatever I can to make things better for its citizens," he said.

Prybyla has lived in Romulus since 1966. He will face 15 other candidates during an at-large primary on Tuesday, Sept. 13.

Casino - City hopes to sign deal operate somewhere in the city while a permanent casino is constructed. The first phase of the project would include soliciting proposals for public and private companies to contract for work building the casino. The tribes will hire all contractors, Petosky said.

The city is banking on revenue from the casino and a racetrack - which will be owned and operated by Magna Entertainment - to spur development in other areas of the city. Lambert said another possible goal down the line might be lowering property taxes for residents.

Currently, the city asks residents for 10 mills, and the Romulus Community School District asks for another 37. Lambert said taxes could be defrayed once the casinos generate revenue for the city.

"I would like to see if they could help the schools out," he said. "I think our taxes are a little high here, and we want to provide relief for residents."

Some council members, however, are cautiously optimistic about the plan, said Councilman William Crova.

"I don't think this was anything we haven't heard before, and this is going to be a long way off," he said. We had a referendum vote in Romulus - and the citizens said they wanted (a casino), and I want it, too. But there is a matter of all of the tribes getting together on this, and there are likely to be court battles along the way. I'd love to see it happen, though."

Romulus voters overwhelmingly approved a ballot initiative that paved the way for gaming in the city in December 2003. That allowed city officials to pursue gaming entities. A casino would have to apply - and be approved - for a license with the Michigan Gaming Control Board before it could open. The gaming license for Michigan Downs - which would round out the "racino" concept in Romulus - was approved in May.

Shooting - There could be 2nd man

Oakbrook Street when Cheeseborough fired shots. The homeowner also fired shots, striking Cheeseborough, who fled to the backyard of the home. He collapsed and died in the yard.

Cheeseborough had been out of prison for 18 months at the time of his death. He had served 16 years behind bars for several offenses, including breaking and entering, robbery, weapons charges, unlawfully driving a vehicle and escaping from prison.

Michigan law allows persons to use deadly force to defend themselves in a situation where they are facing a life or death situation. This is especially true if the potential victim is in an enclosed dwelling because retreating from violence could be next to impossible.

Anyone with information about this case is asked to call Sgt. Dennis Felice at the Romulus Police Detective Bureau at (734) 342-6887, or Crimestoppers at 1 (800) SPEAK-UP.

million in payroll, $1.4 million would have to be set aside for pensions," Carr said. "In actuality, our payroll is higher. But the numbers are huge."

If the $175 per-student increase passes both the State House and Senate, Romulus Community Schools would stand to gain about $700,000. Budget hearings that took place earlier this year produced a tentative budget based on the increase in funding. If a bill is passed that would reduce the level of funding, or the bill fails, administrators and the Romulus School Board will have to back to the drawing board to find more dollars, Carr said.

But Carr is confident the funding increase will pass. "We have people in the legislature and others who are close to the situation that are telling us this will pass," he said.

The district employs about 220 teachers and 200 administrators, bus drivers, paraprofessionals and clerical workers in six schools and other facilities. In April, 27 teachers and administrators accepted a voluntary retirement plan. Carr said some of those individuals will be replaced, others will not.

Clarification

The story "18 candidates to vie for 6 open seats" (Romulus Roman, June 23) inadvertently left out the name of Mayor Protem Randolph Gear, who is seeking another term as a councilman. The city also has seven open seats, not six.

Soaring display

The Van Buren Township Parks and Recreation Department, along with the Eagles Lodge hosted a craft fair and fireworks show last weekend at the Eagles Lodge. The events included musical entertainment, a dunk tank provided by the Belleville Police Department, games, a barbeque dinner and a fireworks show. Joann Manley, a member of the Eagles, said the ladies auxiliary of the Eagles Lodge, which organizes the event, hopes to make the craft fair and fireworks show an annual event in the township.

Court increases price of parenting

They say you can't legislate good parenting. That may be true, but a decision last week by the Michigan Court of Appeals could go a long way in that direction – and it should. The Court of Appeals upheld a Michigan law that means parents of a juvenile delinquent child could be responsible for the costs of the crimes committed by their children.

The decision stemmed from a case in Livingston County, where a youth – 15 at the time – committed acts of vandalism at Howell High School.

This will most likely be a controversial decision, and it could be a controversial law, as well.

Hopefully, though, the implication that parents may be on the hook, financially, for damage caused by their children will help spur them to get more involved in the lives of their offspring.

Parenting is not an easy job, anyone can tell you that. And yet, it's a strange thing because anyone can do it. You have to be tested to get a driver's license, go through training to take on any number of less important tasks, but to be a parent you merely have to follow human nature.

After that, everyone can tell you, there really isn't any instruction manual, although everyone will offer some type of advice.

It may seem like a drastic thing to send parents a bill for the damages caused by their children, compounding an unfortunate situation. One might make the argument that it won't help anything, and could further hurt some families that are already experiencing financial difficulties.

The underlying premise, though, is that parents are ultimately responsible for the behavior of their children. There are plenty of programs in place to help troubled youths, from school counselors to court programs and the like, but to be successful, they all involve one crucial aspect: parental involvement.

It's difficult to be a parent these days; it probably always has been. Parents have to compete with peer pressure, video games, pop culture icons and the like. That's why it's important to stay involved, stay interested and try to head off bad behavior before it happens.

Like we said, it isn't easy. In many cases, it's downright exhausting. But the alternative may prove too costly, for parents and society, alike.

Too high a price to pay

Officials in the Plymouth-Canton School District are contemplating a plan to name facilities – or a portion of them – after corporations that make a large donation for their construction.

Please don't. This is a practice that has a long history – at universities and colleges, and more and more frequently, at sports arenas. That's all well and good – although some might debate even that – but it doesn't have any place at the local level.

Young people today are bombarded with enough advertising. All of us are. It's tough to imagine dropping off the kids at Comerica Elementary or packing them up to send them off to General Motors Middle School, where they would swim in the Bank One Pool or play in the Nike mini-dome. Enough is enough, really.

We can see where the idea comes from: schools have long cried for additional funding, many in western Wayne County have overcrowd-

The local newspaper office fronted one of the main streets in town – in this case, Penniman Avenue in downtown Plymouth. The bulk of the wall that looked out on street was made of glass, in the form of huge windows that showcased an antique printing press that weighed roughly as much as a tank.

Passersby could easily look into the cluttered newsroom, where old gray metal desks and bent wire baskets provided a home for assorted news releases, community announcements and more. The dirty, checkerboard tile flaked and the frayed carpet beyond often showed the stains from an aging, unsteady office mascot, an old canine that had out-

He would have appreciated, too, the octogenarian receptionist, Geneva Guenther, who manned the phones in her traditional red dress or skirt and welcomed all visitors.

And, like me, he would have mourned her passing.

When I heard the news that she had died this weekend, it explained away a feeling I had had all day. It was morose and stagnant: the air was too heavy, the heat too thick, leaves hung slack from branches that were simply

Injury is 'learning the hard way'

I've jammed my finger playing basketball at least a hundred times.

So after my right index finger slammed off the ball last week in a failed steal attempt, I shook it like I always do, assuming the sharp pain I felt would soon subside and I could continue playing.

Little did I know that this wasn't the slight injury I was used to.

When I stopped shaking my finger—like that was going to help the pain, anyway—I began to rub it, like I've done at least a hundred times. When I touched it, I immediately thought, "this finger isn't supposed to bend this way."

I may have been in a state of shock, seeing as I have NEVER had to go to the hospital for more than a flu shot, but I didn't feel the slightest bit of pain until the doctor at St. John's Mercy in Canton started to tug at my now pretzel-shaped extremity like it was some game at a family picnic. I told him, in the nicest way possible, that him yanking on my hand wasn't helping, which prompted the physician to numb the body part that now closely resembled a cheese curl.

The shot he gave me enabled him to push and pull on my finger without me feeling a thing. After the bone was back in place—sort of—I started to act like a 12-year-old. This body part was now completely frozen, which led me to bite, smash and hit it against everything I could think of.

After my two-hour stay in the "emergency" room, I thought, "I could have broken my leg, both my ankles, my knee, anything, but I had to break one of the 10 things I actually need to do my job." Kind of ironic, huh?

The doctor gave me a note saying I shouldn't use my right hand for a week—I failed in my attempt to attain a handicapped sticker for my car—but I knew I couldn't afford to miss work. In some weird way, I didn't want to.

The next day, I sat at my computer at home (trying to) type as best I could. It was just too difficult. I don't even want to talk about my writing. It was already bad enough, now it looked like hieroglyphics.

Technically, I haven't missed a day of work, which goes against the doctor's orders, but they overanalyze everything, anyway.

I was able to finish each story I had for the week, even though I couldn't decipher half the things in my notepad. I went on memory for most of last week's work, so if I got any quotes or information wrong, officials in the City of Plymouth and Plymouth Township know why.

I learned something from all of this: you have to adapt to any situation you're put in that may make you uncomfortable. Things may get difficult at times, but you work your way through it. It makes you a better person.

My injury isn't the first thing that put me on to this fact of life, but it's the one thing that affected a huge enough part of my life for me to put it into perspective.

I think there's something to that, "what doesn't kill you makes you stronger" phrase. In my case, what didn't hurt so bad didn't cause me to miss work.

Oh, and the reason for me "not wanting to miss work?" TV's awful these days, there's a million channels, and maybe two of them have good shows. A guy can only watch so much SportsCenter.

Columnist's opinions blasted

To the editor:

This is in response to Jerry Stanecki's article of May 19 entitled, Casting the first stone.

In the article, he wondered how anyone could 'cast judgment and attempt to force their will on a man in his most desperate hours.' I'm afraid he has it all wrong — those in the most desperate hours were Terri and her loving family trying to keep her from being killed.

Mr. Schiavo couldn't care less. Consider these facts:

Mr. Schiavo lived with another woman with whom he fathered two babies and yet he was designated 'guardian' of Terri's welfare to the moment of death.

He successfully obtained a reputed million-dollar plus malpractice settlement designated for his wife's care. (Personally, I wonder if this was why he didn't divorce and marry the mother of his children.)

Terri was not comatose, was not on a respirator and was not unaware of her circumstances. She smiled faintly. She followed people and objects with her eyes and, according to the registered nurses who cared for her, she succeeded in saying a few words. Nevertheless, Michael and the unjust judge made sure she had no therapy — such as assistance in learning to swallow and eventually no food or water. In the meantime, the media shamelessly made the people think Terri was sustained by artificial means and was probably dying.

None of the doctors who examined

Terri maintained she was in a coma. She was a healthy woman with a severe disability. Terri's case was not about the right to die, but about the right to kill.

It seems to me rather than 'casting the first stone' quote from the Bible, a more appropriate one would be 'by their fruits you shall know them,' and 'What you do (or not) unto others, you do unto me.'

Barb Schmid,
Canton

(Editor's note: Recent autopsy results indicate that Ms. Schiavo's condition was irreversible and she was not capable of any response to outside stimulus. Doctors determined she had no hope of recovery and no cognitive brain function.)

ing issues to deal with, too, and a bond proposal — no matter how well it's packaged — is always a dicey proposition. It's tempting to look for these types of revenue sources, if it means asking for fewer bond funds or smaller millage increases.

The naming of schools, though, is always a tricky proposition. Passions run high, from parents, schoolteachers and alumni alike. Remember the controversy when the Plymouth-Canton district dropped 'Plymouth' from Plymouth-Canton High School and Plymouth-Salem High School? School board members had all the rationale in the world behind them: the fact that it had always been planned, that a new school — which was to be named Plymouth High School — was in the planning stages. Still, parents and former teachers protested. It altered their sense of history.

We also fear that allowing corporations to pay a fee and slap their name on a building, gymnasium, set of classrooms, library or what have you would take away from the efforts of many people who support the schools on a grass roots level. Everyone is trying to secure the funds to keep their programs going, after all, and often those efforts take the shape of community fundraising efforts.

If school officials want to recognize those who help fund their facilities, maybe they should suggest names like Taxpayer Middle School, or Marching Band Booster arena.

At a time when school districts have to investigate every possible revenue stream in order to provide the best educational facilities and programs that they can, it's refreshing, in a way that they are willing to look at this possibility. It shows an open mind, if nothing else. We think, though, that this is an opportunity they should let pass.

Farewell

too still.

That's what it is, I thought, everything is at half-mast.

It's hard to describe Geneva Guenther, even though I shared an office with her for about three years. Some obvious words come up, though: Plymouth royalty, warm-hearted, generous and kind.

She was more than that, though.

In many ways she was the heart of that newspaper office. Most of the people that stopped in were there to see her, not us. They talked about the past, the present and the future.

Sitting on the other side of the wall, overhearing bits of those talks or scraps of telephone conversations, I often marveled at her. The calls that came in were not always pleasant, the people not always friendly, and yet she greeted them all with a warmth and class that I couldn't even begin to emulate.

Plymouth was not always a neighborly town, believe it or not, and the political seasons occasionally got pretty nasty. It didn't seem to phase her, though. In fact there were times when I wondered if she were the last truly nice person on the planet.

At 92 years old, it's easy to say she had a good run. She lived her life the way she chose to, remained active long after many of us would have been content to just pull up a chair and rest. She was always very witty and fun to talk to and the only person I knew that had read Lord of the Rings more often than me and all of my friends combined.

But life caught up with me. I moved out of Plymouth, got a new job with more responsibilities, got too busy and never found the time to go back and visit, even though I knew that seeing and talking with my son, Henry, would have thrilled her to no end.

She had a good run, that's for sure, and Plymouth will be less in her absence. It's no wonder that I miss her already.

Changes to such a large land area, 2.4 percent of the total land area of the Township and 5.8 percent of the remaining vacant land in the Township should not be taken lightly. 2) The request is contrary to the Township Master Plan. 3) The amendment would permit residential land uses in areas where airport approach and landing crash date indicate an accident risk and noise levels exceed those recommended for residential comfort. Non-residential land uses would greatly mitigate these real impacts. 4) Existing uses, zoning and development patterns to the north, northeast, west and southwest are industrial and airport related land uses and are not compatible with the requested residential land uses. 5) The requested amendment is not consistent with Wayne County's Aerotropolis (sic Airport City Plan) and will not support Willow Run Airport as an economic generator. 6) No persuasive evidence has been presented that the property cannot be used as planned and zoned. The Township has other vacant land in equal or greater amounts planned and/or zoned for the proposed uses. 7) This is the only large track of land adjacent to the railway tracks with a frontage of 4000 feet. Motion failed due to lack of support.

Area educators, parents join march on Lansing

Andrea King
Staff Writer

More than 12,000 supporters of public education arrived at the Michigan Capitol Building last week with one common goal—to increase school funding.

The K-16 Coalition for Michigan's Future hosted the Lansing rally for public education in hopes of persuading legislators to increase school funding by approving two bills: Senate Bill 246 and House Bill 4582.

School officials said their voices were heard loud and clear.

"It was fantastic," said Ralph Nodwell, vice-president of the Van Buren school board. "We sent the message that the people of Michigan are concerned with the financial structure of the state and we encouraged the passing of those bills to guide our annual incomes. It's a matter of making noise and recognizing why we were there—for public education. I felt we got that message out to the legislators."

"It was an awesome sight," said Stephen Becher, a retired teacher and member at the Wayne-Westland school board. "They were expecting 5,000 people and they probably had twice that."

Senate Bill 246, which is being pushed by the statewide education group, would ensure additional funds by requiring a minimum yearly funding increase based on the rate of inflation or 5 percent, whichever is less. Another bill, House Bill 4582, was also introduced to aid in the support of the public schools and the intermediate school districts of the state.

"I hope the message was clearly sent to the legislators that there is a need to relook at how schools are funded," said Pete Lazaroff, superintendent for the Van Buren Public Schools. "I'm in favor of anything that would increase school funding."

"We will continue to have conversations with our legislators and hope it carries through other districts," said Lazaroff. "They have promised us that it will be a topic of discussion as they work through the state budget."

If the funding were approved by the legislature, it would be retroactive and would be taken from the 2002-2003 fiscal year when school districts started to feel the impact of a depleted financial system.

"I hope that Lansing will sit up and pay attention," said Toni Hunt, school board member. "The governor was very supportive and is encouraging the House to pass the bills and, if she didn't understand before Tuesday, I think she understands now. I also encourage them to pass the bills, but I don't think it's going to be enough. We're still in big trouble financially. We're still struggling and facing huge cuts. There's got to be more, but the rally definitely was a good day for education."

Becher said he was impressed with the show of support for the school system. The rally also brought back memories of political activism, he said.

"I haven't marched since the 1960s," he said.

Editor Scott Spielman contributed to this story.

Courtroom becomes video location

Jason Carmel Davis
Staff Writer

Many things can usually be heard in Judge Ron Lowe's courtroom at the 35th District Court, but 'quiet on the set' isn't one of them.

That changed last week because a helpful DVD on age discrimination was being filmed by the Michigan Municipal Risk Management Authority (MMRMA).

Video equipment lined the back wall of the courtroom as the agency shot the film, titled "The anatomy of a lawsuit."

"We realize that getting sued is a scary process," said co-producer

Mike Frayer, a former Westland police chief. "We thought this would be a great tool for any government employee who may go through the litigation process."

The group chose age discrimination as the topic of discussion because that issue is applicable across a broad spectrum, Frayer said.

The group chose the 35th District Court—which serves Plymouth, Plymouth Township, Canton Township, Northville and Northville Township—as its set because of an established relationship between the two.

Michael Rhyner, executive director of MMRMA, said the 35th District Court is a part of MMRMA's risk control advisory committee. MMRMA aided the group following the fire that led to the redesign of the current courthouse, Rhyner said.

Frayer said the DVD is free to members and non-members. He also said it would be distributed throughout the United States, and will go as far as Japan.

"This court has been a good member for a long time," he said. "We were pleased to have the opportunity to shoot this here. It's a great place in a great community."

THE SCENE

Gory, gory hallelujah

There's a rich tradition in zombie films, and I don't know any of it. I do know, though, that Land of the Dead, from George A. Romero, stands on its own. I was surprised – for some reason – to find it a solid film, with good acting, a good plot and (gasp) even good dialogue.

Billed as a return to the genre he created with his classic Night of the Living Dead, the movie is probably all Romero fans expected, and more.

It's based 'some time after' his original zombie works and it seems to feed off their history, no pun intended.

Bits of news telecasts open the film, in which shocked newscasters describe the horrors that are taking place and ultimately wonder what would happen if these creatures start to develop a communication system, and work together:

Enter Big Daddy (Eugene Clark), who is smarter (and bigger) than most zombies. He starts to pick up on a few things, like the fact that his...people, for want of a better term...are getting slaughtered because they pay too much attention to the bright fireworks in the sky (sky flowers, a tried and true diversionary tactic) and not enough attention to the fact that while they're looking up, living humans can essentially do what they want, including scattering them to pieces with well-aimed shotgun blasts.

That, I think, is the foundation of the subtle bit of satire going on in the film, and I was thankful that Romero, who wrote and directed the film, left it subtle and didn't cram its message down the throats of the audience, as many Hollywood directors would do. The lower and middle classes are being distracted by pageantry from their own grim reality.

Because in this unknown future, there are class systems, the highest of which is represented by the residents of Fiddler's Green, a skyscraper in the center of the city. Those who live there want for nothing, can shop for anything, although how they get in and out (if they do) and how they earn their living (if they do) is a bit of a question.

Inside the city, but out of the reach (momentarily) of the zombie hordes are city dwellers who apparently get by with things looted from outside stores.

That's where our heroes come in; it's their job to go out and get these items. They're led by Riley (Simon Baker), whose second-in-command,

LAND OF THE DEAD

works on all levels

Cholo, starts trouble when he makes a pitch to the head of Fiddler's Green to purchase a resident there.

There will be none of that, however. Kaufman (played perfectly by a goateed Dennis Hopper) tells him that there's a long waiting list, membership has to be approved, and so on and so on.

Cholo decides his best alternative is to steal Kaufman's most impressive weapon, a heavily armed converted semi-truck called Dead Reckoning, and blackmail him.

"Trouble?" One of Kaufman's underlings asks him after he hears the demands.

"In a world where the dead return to life, the word 'trouble' has lost much of its meaning," is the response.

I told you the dialogue was good. Consider this, too: after Riley turns a few zombies into scattered bits of meat, his sidekick, Charlie (Robert Joy) compliments his work.

"Nice shooting," he says.

"It's 'good' shooting," Riley corrects him. "There's no such thing as 'nice' shooting."

Riley is ordered to retrieve Dead Reckoning, while Big Daddy and his minions shamle toward the city, picking up weapons and figuring out how to use them along the way.

So, what happens when the zombies start working together and are no longer distracted by the sky flowers? Well, trust me, it's pretty gross.

If your stomach is strong enough, though, and if you're a fan of the franchise – or even just curious about its appeal, Land of the Dead is well worth the time.

THE SCENE

Back to the 80s

Former area resident re-releases album

Jeff Novak
Staff Writer

Some might say the 80s never go away, that they're always lurking in the background like a George Michael song or a Miami Vice leisure suit.

However, the 80s revival is in full swing again with recent hit shows such as NBC's Hit Me Baby One More Time, where one-hit wonders take to the stage to resurrect their hits from 20 years ago. Leather-clad, bandana-wearing rock bands are also coming out of the woodwork to again grace audiences with their presence. Motley Crue, Poison, Sammy Hagar and even Duran Duran are releasing new material or making their way back to big venues.

It's no different for this area's favorite southern rocker Terry Lee "Shotgun" Bolton, who has decided to return to his roots. That doesn't mean he's moving back to Michigan; no, this Nashville, Tennessee resident is making a "push" to get back to his big hair, loud guitars and wailing vibrato days.

Back in 1984, while Crockett and Tubbs were running around sockless in their loafers, a teenage Bolton, then a Canton Township resident, lounged in a booth at McDonalds with a member of his band Nija contemplating a change of band names. While looking at the trashean in the corner of the restaurant he decided on Push.

The Push band quickly grew in popularity, knocked out a four-song LP, "Push 'Til It Hurts," on his and his father's Jansco label. Push also hit the road on a 300-date year tour in the U.S. and Canada, where they opened for such rock icons as Joe Perry, Aldo Nova, Autograph and Ratt. Bolton played for no less than 800 people and up to 10,000 per show, he said.

A year later, when the tour ended, so did the band. Like a lot of good bands, drugs and alcohol halted the momentum of Push, ending their run as one of the up-and-coming bands of the decade. Years later Bolton cleaned up his act and moved to Nashville, where he is pursuing a solo career.

Recently Bolton said that he has been getting calls and emails from people around the world including Australia, Germany and Japan requesting a Push album. So he dug out the old recordings, re-mastered all the songs – which he owns – and is now filling orders across the country and around the world.

But he's not doing this for another opportunity to dust off his curling iron and blow dryer or to don his skin-tight leather pants. While most people would die for a second chance, Bolton is living his.

"This was something that I had written off as a failure," Bolton said. "Now it's a way for me to redeem a loss from 20 years ago and the opportunity is there."

"It wouldn't be important to me if it wasn't for the fans that wanted it."

"Right now I think that the '80s are so popular; I think it is more popular now than when they were actually happening," Bolton said.

Bolton fans don't have to worry, either. He still plans to release his newest solo effort "American Man," within the next couple of months. He just put together a 60-minute, 10-track compendium of drum solos in a six-hour, one-day effort, too. That should be available soon.

"Everybody wants to forget the past," he said, "but if we can't celebrate it and glorify it now, then it's all a waste."

Undue influence Part 1:
Mann forced out at Inkster

Jeff Novak
Staff Writer

Last Tuesday supporters of Dave Mann marched into the Inkster school board meeting and demanded answers.

They wanted to know why their beloved athletic director and girls' varsity basketball coach wasn't going to be at the school next year.

At times the meeting erupted into garbled banter between the supporters and school board members and in the end nothing was resolved.

"There's nothing we can do for Dave Mann at this time," said board member Ruth Williams.

So goes the story of Mann, who resigned at the end of the school year in the wake of being suspended from coaching at any Michigan school for the 2005-2006 school year for allegedly contacting a parent of a Romulus girls' basketball player—a violation of the Michigan High School Athletic Association's (MHSAA) Undue Influence rule. The school was also sentenced to a one-year probationary period.

Since then, Mann has exhausted all personal efforts to prove his innocence including handing over hundreds of documents that proves his case, documents that deal with the Romulus incident and prior alleged incidents, as well.

His resignation came after Howard Morris, the state-appointed finance director for the school district, chose not to appeal the final decision on the behalf of Mann.

"We used a lot of money and resources in support of Dave Mann," Morris said. "There came a point where we didn't feel we could continue the process."

With new evidence in hand and one step away from pleading his case, Inkster failed to step up to the plate for Mann. And the MHSAA refused to let Mann appeal the case on his own.

Needless to say Mann was disappointed.

"Mr. Morris had told me previously that we would exhaust all appeals," Mann said. "I had told Mr. Morris that the MHSAA wanted him to fire me. Given that Mr. Morris believed that I was innocent, he had told me previously that firing me 'wouldn't be right.'"

"The MHSAA has made it plain that its intention is to get me and to not let the evidence or its own due process procedure get in the way."

He's the Mann

Remember Dave Mann?

He was the coach that, while at Inkster, won a Class C State Championship in 2002, made a final four appearance in 2003, won regional and district championships in '02 and '03, won four division championships 2000-03 and a Mega League championship in 2000.

He was also voted the Associated Press Class B State Coach of the Year in 2000 and the Basketball Coaches Association of Michigan (BCAM) Class C Coach of the Year 2002 and picked to coach the BCAM All-Star game.

Through basketball, he has helped seven of his former players obtain scholarships to play ball at universities around the country and, when all was said and done, he posted a 103-16 record at Inkster.

That's not all.

At Bishop Borgess, Mann's last stop before coming to Inkster, he collected three Class C state championships ('93, '94, and '97). He set a state record for six consecutive appearances in the final four along with six regional crowns. He won the Catholic League and City championships in 1995 and won four Operation Friendship Championships ('92, '94, '96 and '97). His teams also nabbed eight district and six division titles.

He was selected as the Catholic League Coach of the Year four times ('92, '93, '94 and '97) and BCAM's Class C Coach of the Year in '93, which led to him coaching the All-Star game that year. He also received honors as the Detroit News Statewide Coach of the Year in '97. At Borgess he posted a staggering 198-79 record and helped send more than 34 players on to the next level over a 10-year span ('89-'99).

There's more.

He's also groomed two Miss Basketball recipients: Maxann Reese (95) and Aiysha Smith (97). Both, along with Candice Finely and Koren Merchant, play for either the WNBA or developmental leagues overseas.

Resignation super-Mann

Why would such a decorated coach resign in the prime of his career at the age of 44? That appears to be the burning question for everyone.

At the board meeting several players, former players, parents of

Romulus baseball, softball recap

Jeff Novak
Staff Writer

Romulus is normally known as a basketball town, but their endeavors on the diamond shouldn't be overlooked.

The 2005 season was a huge success for both the Eagles' baseball and softball teams.

The varsity boys' baseball team captured their third straight Mega Gold Conference Championship with a winning record of 13-8. Their postseason was cut short, however, when they lost, 10-0, to a No. 1-ranked Class A Ann Arbor Pioneer team.

The 2005 Eagles showed that they were on top of the Gold Conference when they finished with an 11-1 league record. Their only loss was to a very much improved River Rouge team back in early May. The Romulus sluggers redeemed themselves on the last day of the season when they faced the Panthers for a second time. This time, with home field advantage, they won in dramatic fashion, coming from behind and winning, 9-8. The win secured their third conference championship in as many years.

Romulus struggled against non-conference opponents, though. They won only two of their nine contests.

Seniors Philip Roscoe, Keith Haynes, Will Williams and juniors LJ Hardy and Brian Demoisey were all selected to the All-Conference team. Senior Ronnie Brown was also named an All-Conference Honorable mention.

The Eagles lost a strong core of seniors to the graduation. Williams was magnificent at the plate, boasting a powerful .642 batting average while Haynes recorded a .590 average. Roscoe, the team's starting catcher, was also a top hitter, posting a .516 batting average on the year.

They will still have some power returning with Demoisey's .551 average and Hardy's .392.

The boys' base-running counterparts, the Lady Eagle varsity softball team, were equally successful in the 2005 season.

Led by senior captains Katie Hale and Kenise Thompson, Romulus outscored their opponents, 209-61, to go undefeated (12-0) in league play and 17-7 overall.

The Lady Eagles were impressive from the plate. Junior Kate Appel led the team from the plate with 40 hits in 74 at-bats, 31 stolen bases and a team-leading .541 batting average for all 24 games, according to Romulus Coach Jennifer Slyman. Hale produced 41 runs while batting .468 and led the team with 35 stolen bases.

Junior Amanda Hollis led the team with 37 RBI. She batted .459 for the season while junior Lindsay Beregsasy led the team in doubles (7) and batted .489. Senior Lashonda Whitehead was also a powerhouse from the plate with a .511 average and 24 hits on the season.

Defense was strong with Hale behind the plate, Thompson in center field and Whitehead in left field. The infield was also solid with Nicole Goodman at first, Appel at second, Hollis at shortstop and Beregsasy at third.

Junior Chelsea Smith and sophomore Jessica Dick shared pitching duties for the season. Smith finished the season pitching a total of 55 innings with 62 Ks and only 27 earned runs. Dick recorded 65 innings form the circle and only allowed 24 walks on the season.

roster. The girls were used in pitch-hitting duties according to Slyman.

After a stellar season Hale, Thompson, Whitehead and Appel were selected to the All-Conference team. Hollis, Beregsasy, Goodman, Smith and Jessica Dick received honorable mentions.

Talent will be plentiful next year as 10 players are expected to return for another go.

July 2005 Tax Update

Among the recent tax developments that could affect you are the following items:

Last year's tax law restored the full $2,000 deduction for the purchase of a new clean-fuel automobile. This deduction can be taken even if you don't itemize deductions on your return. 2005 hybrid cars that the IRS has certified for the deduction include the Honda Accord Hybrid, Honda Insight, Honda Civic Hybrid, Ford Escape Hybrid, and Toyota Prius. The IRS also recently certified the 2006 Lexus RX 400h.

Under previous rules, employers were required to send the IRS employee withholding forms (Form W-4) that claimed more than ten allowances or that claimed withholding exemption if $200 or more in weekly wages was expected. Admitting that this program was ineffective, the IRS has changed the rules. Employers are now to send the IRS an employee's Form W-4 only when the IRS specifically requests it. Potential withholding problems will be identified through other information the IRS receives, such as W-2 wage statements.

An easing in the rules governing flexible spending accounts will be welcome news for many taxpayers. These accounts allow employees to set aside pre-tax dollars each year to pay for unreimbursed medical expenses and dependent care costs. The problem was that any money remaining in the account at year-end was forfeited. Now the IRS will permit employers to modify their plans to extend the reimbursement period for a given year to March 15 of the following year. According to the Treasury, this extension will keep employees from the year-end scramble to use or lose remaining funds.

Q - I see low rate mortgages and interest-only payment programs advertised everywhere. Are they a good idea?

A - Sometimes, but no single mortgage product is right for everyone. Always look at the "fine print" for details of how often the interest rate and payment might change during the life of the loan. Some mortgage products may start with a very low rate but could adjust every three or six months. Can your budget absorb that? If you know you will move in five to seven years, is a 30-year fixed-rate loan the best option? It's very important to sit down with a mortgage expert and evaluate all of the available mortgage options. At DFCU Financial, we have a Mortgage Loan Officer in every branch to meet with you. Mann players and concerned citizens of Inkster showed up to protest Mann's leaving, feeling that it was unjustified and forced.

Their efforts were roadblocked by a powerless board of education, but that didn't stop them from speaking their peace.

"He's more than a coach," said Tiffany Smith, a former Inkster player who is now playing basketball at Robert Morris University in Pittsburgh, Pa. "Dave's a part of the Inkster family. That's why I don't understand why the board won't support him or back him or appeal the whole situation. He supported all of their kids; even members of the board's kids played for Dave."

"Dave and I were close and he was more than a coach—he was a teacher," said Tiffany's father. "He took time out and tutored my daughter in math once a week."

"He's a good guy, he really is," he added. "He has heart and he works so hard and he does this for the kids, not himself. He brought the whole school together and not just basketball—the whole school. It's like when God put somebody on Earth to do something, he was chosen to do this (coach)."

However, Mann wrote a two-page resignation letter dated April 13 of his own accord, according to Morris.

But in a phone conversation on Thursday, June 16, Morris said if Mann hadn't resigned there might have been other consequences. He didn't suggest what they might have been.

"I was disappointed that Mr. Morris changed his mind about what was the right thing to do," Mann said about Morris not filing for an appeal. "I told him that his actions were contrary to the values of loyalty and teamwork that we're trying to teach the kids."

Morris said he is already looking for a replacement coach/athletic director to fill the vacancy before the board of education regains full power from the state on August 9.

The administration of Edison/Inkster schools feel that they did the right thing as Herb Williams, the executive vice president of Edison Schools, said at the school board meeting: "This isn't about Dave Mann, it's about the kids."

While Mann's career—his livelihood—hangs in the balance, piles of evidence that could prove his innocence collect dust somewhere in the MHSAA catacombs.

However, he still plans to fight tooth and nail to clear his name of the MHSAA's allegations; allegations he feels are unjust and unwarranted.

"We preach to our kids that success in life is predicated on hard work and that our success and failures are directly tied to the effort we invest," Mann said. "We preach to our kids that that obstacles will be put in our path, that life will treat you unfairly, but that we have an obligation to press ahead."

"How can I preach to the kids what I am not willing to do myself? If I allow myself and my programs to be torn down, I am doing a disservice to my kids because I am not setting the right example."

"Our girls' basketball program is a family," he added. "It's my family. If I don't fight this, I would be letting down my family."

Next week, "Undue Influence Part 2" will investigate the allegations that led to Dave Mann's "resignation" and explore the evidence that pertains to past and present accusations.

Staff writer Molly Tippen provided information from the school board meeting.
